Livingston Awards honor students' caring acts

Forty Glenbard high school students were honored for their concern for others when they were presented with Livingston Human Relations Awards. The Board of Education presented the awards during its April 24 meeting at Glenbard East High School in Lombard.

Livingston Award recipients include:

Glenbard West

Josh Adams, Jordan Alvis, Maddie Deegan, Suzanne Hess, Lauren Lefty, Anna Littlehale, Emma Martin, Brittany McGrath, Jeff Minkus and Matt Vassil.

Glenbard North

Sahar Ashrafi, Amara Aziz, Meghan Bescher, Katherine Brichacek, Akihito Kojima, Tracy Laluma, Carlos Lopez, Reed Lyons, Katherine Rothlisberger, and Kareem Shabib.

Glenbard South

Margo Cherrie, Scott Clary, Ashleigh Coran, Ann Galus, John Grayson, Dan Kelly, Christopher Leamy, Mark Micheli, Kristopher Muzzall, and Mary Kate Norton.

Glenbard East

Christina Alexandersson, Art Bell, John Bender, Adnan Cassim, Jennifer Georges, Catherine Hood, Mary Lynch, Alicia Santeralli, Patricia Wajda, and Kevin Wood.

The board instituted the award in honor of former Superintendent Raymond W. Livingston. The award is given to 10 students from each Glenbard high school each year. It honors students who have demonstrated real concern for others and have promoted positive, caring relationships among social groups regardless of race, sex, religion, ethnicity, economic level, physical ability, or academic prowess.

Examples of behavior that would merit a Human Relations Award include exhibiting courage in defending the rights of others; befriending others regardless of socio-economic, racial, religious, ethnic or academic background; showing consistent kindness and courtesy to staff members and other students; performing sustained volunteer work within the school or community; and exhibiting a cooperative spirit consistently with students and staff members in classrooms and co-curricular activities.
